BOMBS AWAY

Intensive training in split-second precision is turning student bombardiers into the world's most accurate "egg-layers." Our bombsight calls for skilled hands and coordination. Before the 300-mile-an-hour run over a target, the bombardier must set his sight for altitude. During the run he must coach the pilot and calculate the speed of the plane, temperature, and direction of wind.

At Army Air Forces' bombardier schools, the cadet learns to put 190 out of 200 bombs close to the target before he qualifies. He then drops his nickname "pullet" and pins on his wings and gold bars.

An armistice, we believe, will follow a few days later. -Robert Day in the New Yorker.

5. Two armed cadets carry Air Forces' most guarded secret, the bombsight, to their plane.

TRAINING TROOPS

BATTLE SCENE—Completely realistic, though "faked" indoors, this picture was made by U. S. Army Signal Corps as part of a troop-training movie.

NEW YORK—There is a motion picture studio in Astoria where they do everything in the best Hollywood tradition, even to furnishing a canvas-backed chair for the director.

The films made in the Signal Corps Photographic Center, however are not about love. The director's name on his chair is preceded by his military rank, and the films show soldiers how to use guns and bayonets, how to conduct tank offensives—and carve up a side of beef.

In use only since last September, the studio represents a swiftly expanding phase of military education. Col. M. E. Gillette, the studio's Signal Corps commanding officer, says that in certain cases the films reduce training time of recruits by 40 per cent.

Astoria is one of the Long Island communities gobbled up alive by New York City. The vast, spacious studio was built back in 1920 for Famous Players-Lasky, at a cost of around $10,000,000; some famous movies were screened within its walls.

WOULD YOU?

Would you take the day off,
If you were fighting night and day?
And you knew your life depended
On whether I came to work or stayed away?

Could you make excuses for me,
Would you attempt an alibi,
If you knew I shirked my duty
The day you saw your buddy die?

Would you have me waste tomorrow
And keep you waiting "Over There"
For guns and tanks and powder
Because I hadn't done my share?

I don't think you would, "Ole Fellow,"
Wars aren't won that way,
Life and Liberty depend on
Whether I come to work or stay away.

Let Old Boreas Do His Worst

Navy men must have appropriated some ideas from American farm buildings in the huts put up for U.S. Navy air patrol squadrons in the Aleutian Islands. They are all the more cozy for having snow drifts cover them completely, thus making them warmer inside.

BRITISH TROOPS ON THE ROAD TO TRIPOLI AND TUNISIA

This picture, flashed by radio from Cairo to the United States, shows British troops on the last leg of their trip from the Egyptian border to Tripoli, Mussolini's one-time citadel. The city was occupied after the remnants of Rommel's Afrika Korps had been driven out by General Montgomery's desert troops and the guns of the Royal navy. The leading vehicle seems to be an armored truck carrying a light anti-tank gun and crew. The British raced on west toward Tunisia, where Allied troops were mopping up Nazi chutists trying to widen the 50-mile "bomb alley" of escape left to Marshal Rommel's Axis forces.

VICTORY AHEAD

MARSEILLES—WHERE FRENCH CITIZENS DEFIED NAZIS

Though many Frenchmen and women had been killed and German army authorities threatened to shell the area with heavy field guns—the barrage to be followed by a tank attack—French residents of the old harbor district of Marseilles remained in their barricaded homes. Rioting broke out when the French resisted orders to evacuate the area. Pictured is a view of the famed Mediterranean port.

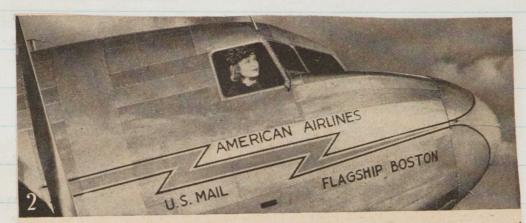

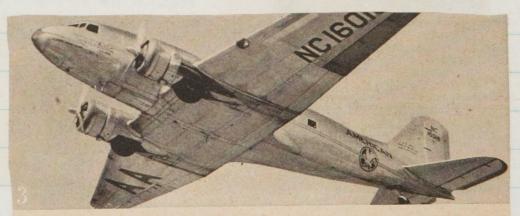

An example of the brand of justice handed out by the Nazis is illustrated by the photos above. Suffering from typhus, 2,300 captured Serbians were sent far north to Jernvannet, near the Swedish border, where they were placed in the prison camp shown in lower photo. Later they were lined up and shot by storm troopers. One of the graves, without a cross or name, is pictured top, near camp.

THE WAR WORKER

We come by bus and we come by

We are all working for one aim We stand at the gate and watch them

It's the man behind the man behind the gun.

We dip and wring, we mix and we press

What we will accomplish Hitler can

And to meet the land of the rising sun It takes the man behind the man behind the gun.

We toil by day and we toil by night We're doing our part to win this fight We trudge home weary, our shift is done

It's still the man behind the man behind the gun.

Sometimes it's hard we will confess We shouldn't grumble but do our best When the war is over and victory won They'll praise the man behind the man behind the gun.
